Workshop on Atherogenesis and Aging June 30, July 1-2, 1985 The papers in this volume are based upon a Workshop "Atherogenesis and Aging" sponsored by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute, and the National Institute on Aging on July 1-2, 1985 at Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

inflammation contributes to atherogenesis and an in-creased low-level inflammation during the aging process (â€˜inflammagingâ€™™) has been proposed as a culprit for many age-related diseases, including CVD. Monocyte-derived macrophages are the most abundant immune cells in atherosclerotic plaques, and are key to concept that atherogenesis starts relatively early in life (Figure 2-1) with the accumulation of lipid in the foci which have the potential to progress into raised plaques (1).

The Pathogenesis of Atherosclerosis: Myths and Established

Atherosclerosis is also associated with premature biological aging, as atherosclerotic plaques show evidence of cellular senescence characterized by reduced cell proliferation, irreversible growth arrest and apoptosis, elevated DNA damage, epigenetic modifications, and telomere shortening and dysfunction.

Somewhat indirect experimental . evidence in support of the cross-linking theory of aging appears in studies that look at drugs that prevent cross-linking, and the impact of taking those drugs on the various components of the aging process.

Atherosclerosis is a leading cause of mortality and morbidity in the western world. It has been recognized for over a century, and the understanding of its pathogenesis has undergone many changes. Pathophysiological studies have unravelled the interactions of molecular and cellular elements involved in atherogenesis.

4 Global Health and Aging Humanity's Aging In 2010, an estimated 524 million people were 65 years of age or older. By 2050, this number is expected to nearly triple to about 1.5 billion, representing 25% of the world population. More developed countries have the oldest and the most rapidly aging populations, while less developed countries have the youngest and the most rapidly growing populations.

Aging leads to insulin resistance during atherogenesis. (A) Fasting blood glucose was obtained from young (2 months of age) and aged (12 months of age) Ldlr-/- mice administered a HFD for an additional 6 weeks.
